

was most obstinately resisted by the Egotists, and was at length extorted from their fears, not conceded by their sense of justice. Being finally defeated, and deprived in a great measure of the means of corruption, by the disfranchisement of the rotten boroughs and the great addition to the constituency, their only hope of now recovering the ascendancy, consists in deceiving the Electors, and by working upon their fears and other prejudices, to induce them to vote for their creatures, and to fill as many seats in the House of Commons as possible with their nominees. Let the Electors, therefore, beware of this manœuvre—the eyes of all their neighbours are fixed upon them; if they thus betray the sacred trust reposed in them, they will do all they can to destroy the constitution, incur most deserved contempt, and may bring about revolution, bloodshed, and devastation. Of a part of these defeated Egotists, a club has been formed, to execute the plans formed by them—to defeat the intention of the friends of the people—to render the Reform Bill a dead letter—to perpetuate the burdens under which we groan, and to support the inordinate luxury of the few rich and idle, by the sacrifice of all the comforts of the many industrious. These are the blessings and the constitution which the said club wishes to conserve. With such design, it has determined to put forward a Candidate of similar principles for the representation of every county and borough in the empire, and has subscribed large sums to defray the expenses to be incurred in the expected contests. Think of this, O ye Electors, and do your duty!! For the County of Aberdeen, it was, doubtless, impossible to find a more fit person for the purposes of the said club, than the present Representative. I mean no offence to that gentleman, whom I believe to be an honourable man, according to the principles in which he has been educated, and by which he has been conscientiously governed. He is, however, a scion of the aristocracy, and can have no ideas or interest in common with the people whom he fictitiously represents in Parliament. He is, in fact, only the nominee of the noble Lords who,
