PRELIMINARY ANNOUNCEMENT

The Ninth International Perspectives in Percutaneous Penetration Conference is to be held in La Grande Motte (near Montpellier), France from 13-17 April 2004.

Over more than a decade the PPP has established itself as a premier international meeting providing a unique forum for the discussion of a wide range of academic, industrial and regulatory perspectives on percutaneous penetration. The PPP is dedicated to the presentation and discussion of the latest information and technology on the penetration of exogenous compounds through the skin and it is of particular relevance to a wide range of scientists involved in research, development, risk assessment and regulatory affairs relating to the dermal effects of molecules.

Carefully selected, internationally respected, speakers will address current topics of importance in the chemical, cosmetic and pharmaceutical fields within industrial, academic and governmental domains. In addition, a one-day introductory course on skin permeation will be run immediately before the conference and the meeting will also include a special EDETOX Symposium reviewing the EU Framework V project on Evaluations and Predictions of Dermal Absorption of Toxic Chemicals.

Further details are attached and regularly updated information on all aspects of the PPP2004 meeting will be posted on the conference website (www.pppconference.org).
