Introduction

Many individuals and institutions have deposited their papers with the University; as a result it has acquired an unrivalled collection of material not solely relating to the history and culture of the north-east of Scotland but also of national and international importance.

Agricultural education in the University dates back to 1790 when a bequest founded a lectureship in ‘Agriculture in connection with Chemistry and Natural History’. However, it was not until 1840 that the first Fordyce Lectureship, John Shier, was appointed. This was strengthened by the merger in 1963 of the University and the North of Scotland College of Agriculture (founded in 1904) to form the School of Agriculture.

Archival collections

University institutional papers

Faculty of Education in agriculture papers: 1892 – 1906 (MSU 888).

The Rowett Institute of Nutrition and Health was founded in 1913 when an Institute for Research in Animal Nutrition was established under the supervision of a joint committee appointed by the University of Aberdeen and the North of Scotland College of Agriculture. The Institute played a major role in establishing the link between diet and health in the first half of the 20th Century (notably the Carnegie Dietary Research Survey) and it continues to work on major diet-related health and food security issues: 1913 – current (MSU 1451).

Family and estate papers

The deposit of papers by local families has led to the University being in possession of an unrivalled collection of archival material relating to Scotland’s rural past. These archives are fantastically rich for the study of estate management and improvement and also contain large series of tenants’ records, for example in the collections of Arbuthnott of Arbuthnott (MS 2764) and the Earls of Fife (Duff House) (MS 3175). The sources include writs, letter books, rentals, tacks, accounts, correspondence (between owner and tenant), building specifications, maps and plans.
