Inaugural issue of Apardjón Journal for Scandinavian Studies (Spring 2020)

Theme: Open Issue

We are now inviting article proposals for the inaugural issue of Apardjón Journal for Scandinavian Studies. The first issue seeks to publish interdisciplinary articles related to the history, literature, language, and archaeology of medieval Scandinavia.

Apardjón Journal for Scandinavian Studies is a multi-disciplinary open access, online journal, attached to the Centre for Scandinavian Studies at the University of Aberdeen, which aims to create a platform for postgraduate and early career researchers to publish and promote their academic work. With a focus first and foremost on the Old Norse world, the journal is especially interested in interdisciplinary approaches and methodologies within the field of Medieval Scandinavian Studies but will consider articles from different geographies that are connected to the Norse world. Submissions are welcome from all postgraduate and early career researchers and will go through a blind peer-review (please see the journal website submission guidelines and further information). For an overview of the journal, please visit the website here.

An essay prize of £200 will be awarded to the best article submitted, and is sponsored by the Viking Society for Northern Research.

Abstracts should outline your research question(s), approach, data and/or materials used and be no longer than 300 words (excluding references). Submissions are to present original, previously unpublished scholarship. Articles are to be between 6,000 and 8,000 words.

Abstract Submission Deadline: 15 May 2019

Article Submission Deadline: 15 September 2019

We will also consider book reviews and translation submissions for the inaugural issue.

Please send your abstracts to us no later than 15 May 2019 at apardjon@abdn.ac.uk. The submission deadline for completed articles is 15 September 2019. For any queries, please do not hesitate to contact the editorial team at apardjon@abdn.ac.uk.
