Introduction

Many individuals and institutions have deposited their papers with the University; as a result it has acquired an unrivalled collection of material not solely relating to the history and culture of the north-east of Scotland but also of national and international importance.

The University holds a rich collection of material that gives an insight into the complex history of shifting political allegiances during the 17th and 18th centuries. Far removed from Presbyterianism's heartlands in the central Lowlands and Borders, Catholicism survived and Episcopalianism prospered in the north-east of Scotland long after the Reformation. With its long tradition of loyalism to the House of Stuart it is unsurprising that Aberdeen became a Jacobite stronghold.

It is no surprise then that the University has perhaps the best collection of printed Jacobite texts in existence, the MacBean Collection, together with some important manuscript holdings.

Printed collections

The Local Collection, accessible via the Reading Room, contains relevant printed material including core reference works.

There are also named collections of relevance:

The MacBean Jacobite and Stuart Collection

The collection was donated to Aberdeen by the New York businessman, William M. MacBean and is a resource of international importance. Some 3,500 books and 1,000 pamphlets, as well as numerous contemporary engravings cover many aspects of the histories of the Stuarts and the Jacobite risings. Some are held in no other collection in the UK, and some are unique, with the collection also being added to continually. The collection also includes later, 19th century, retrospective and romantic depictions of Jacobite history, as well as some two dozen manuscript items.
