Stress Management

Stress Management

Stress is the “wear and tear” our bodies experience as we adjust to a changing environment. It has physical and emotional effects on us and can create positive or negative feelings. Stress will help or hinder us depending on how we react to or perceive it. Positive stress (or pressure) adds anticipation and excitement to life and we all thrive under a certain amount of it.

Our quest is not to eliminate stress but to learn how to manage it and how to use it to help us. Insufficient pressure may leave us feeling bored or demotivated. Excessive stress may leave us feeling “tied up in knots”. What we need to do is find the optimal level of stress which will individually motivate but not overwhelm us. There is no standard stress level or barometer. We are all unique individuals with unique requirements. What is stress to one may not be to another as we differ in our physiological and psychological responses to it.

Top Tips

Awareness. Identify your stressors and your emotional and physical reactions.

Meaning. Determine what stresses you. What are you telling yourself about the meaning of these events?

Change. Can you change your stressors by avoiding or eliminating them?

Exposure. Can you shorten your exposure to stress - take a break, leave the physical premises, distract yourself, do something different, speak to a friend?

Dedication. Can you devote the time and energy necessary to making a change? Goal-setting, time-management techniques and delayed gratification strategies may be helpful here.

Danger? The stress reaction is triggered by your perception of danger... physical danger and/or emotional danger. Are you viewing your stressors in exaggerated terms and/or taking a difficult situation and making it seem like a disaster?

Reality. Are you overreacting and viewing things as absolutely critical and urgent when they are not?

Cope. Can you reassess stress as something to cope with rather than something that overpowers you?

Perspective. Put the situation in perspective. Avoid labouring on the negative aspects and the "what ifs".

Breath. Slow, deep breathing will bring your heart rate back to normal.

Chill. Relaxation techniques can reduce muscle tension.

Medications. When prescribed by a GP, medication can help in the short-term to moderate your physical reactions.

Fitness. Exercise for cardiovascular fitness three to four times a week but check first with your GP what is appropriate exercise for you, so you're not over-doing it.

Food/weight. Eat well-balanced, nutritious meals and maintain your ideal weight.

Stimulants. Avoid nicotine, excessive caffeine, and other stimulants.

Relax. Mix leisure with work. Take breaks and get away when you can.

Zzzz. Manage your sleep patterns. Try guided meditations to relax at bedtime.

Friends. Develop some mutually supportive friendships/relationships.
